many hearts, disappoint so many hopes, or take from the walks of private life an individual charged with such peculiar responsibilities. Seldom does he take from amongst us, one whose example was so bright, whose preparation was so mature, or whose existence seemed so necessary to the happiness of others. As neighbor, a christian, a wife, a mother, she was a rare example of excellence. All who knew her, will feel that it is not the language of mere cology, when we say that she filled all these relations with peculiar R flington, Vt., April 1, 1843. dignity, kindness, wisdom and grace. All who have John Arnold, dignity, kindness, wisdom and grace. All who have ever dwelt by her, as a neighbor, will remember with gratitude her generous kindness, her deep sympathy in their afflictions,—her prompt and efficient aid in troul le and her asfe counsels in the hour of perplexity.

For us to speak of her as a wife;—a mother, might be an intrusion into the sanctuary of cherishedd and sacred feelings. There are those who know and feel her worth in these tender relations, as no tongue can speak or pen describe it. Their hearts only know the sorrow which this death has occasioned. The loss of a pious, affectionate and prudent mother,—the bright and attractive centre of the circle of home, is necessarily an irreparable loss.

The death of Mrs. Callin will be deeply felt beyond the circle of relations; for she filled an important place in society. Possessed of a sweet and even temper, and of an excellent mind and hand the head the lill will of none, and the temperated affections of all.—While she had no taste for the fivedoca ampasements and the empty pageantry of fashano, a possessed a R. Mrs. Catlin was born in Littlefield County, Conn.
H. & H. Bishop,
John W. Briggs,

She had a praying mother, who still lives, at the age of 95, to mourn her daughter's death. From childanifested unusual tenderness to religious bood she manifested unusual tenderness to religious obligations. She made a profession of religion and united with the Congregational Church in this place U. S. Custom House, in Jan. 1317. That profession she adorned till the day of her death, and her path was that of the just James J. Cutter, "shining more and more unto the perfect day."—Ross Chienine, While she was every where a consistent and active l'aniel Conkling, christian; the sphere of home was that which she most loved and adorned. There, she exhi ited a combination of virtues, social, intellectual, amiable and religious, constituting a character of no ordinary Dennis Chapin, worth. We shall ever remember the sweetness of Levi Carrington, her disposition, the blundness of her manners, her Oren Clark, 2, evences of temper, her courteo sness and patience and unostentations and extensive charities.

The leading attributes of her religious character Albert Chittenden, Ann Dolan,

The leading attributes of her religious character were humility, candor, consciectiousness and decision.

She possessed great candor. She was ever ready to perceive and admit the good qualities of others; she gave, readily, the tribute of praise to whom it was due, Michael Joranghey, Michael Joranghey, Parcel Purpha. gave, readily, the tribute of praise to whom it and the prosper Durphs, and was more ready to perceive and deal severely Prosper Durphs, with her own faults, than with the faults of others.—

She was a humble disciple. Grace had taught her to rule her own spirit-she was not one of those 'shi- Widow Elder ning ones, whose upward path was attended with A. W. B. Edwards transports of joy, but rather one of those, who walk in the valley of humiliation.

She was conscientious; binding herself indissolubely to truth and duty. She loved her Bible, I cause it contained the connacts of a Father—a Heavenly Father—to a child. It was the food of her Soul. Its development of the plan of redemption-its promises of the Spirit's teachings-its high and holy precepts -its wide unveilings of the eternal world nil fastened powerfully upon her heart. She was a student of the Bib'e even on the death-bed, often asking her Pastor and other friends the meaning of passages occurring to her mind.

She loved the sanctuary. She loved the church all its interests were near to her heart. She loved religion for its own value and for the honor which it Julia Hyde, brings to God. Her soul panted after perfect holiness Charle, H. Howard, 2, of heart and life. She endeavored constantly to walk of heart and life. She endeavored constantly to walk with God in the discharge of private duties and in this way she enjoyed steadily a talm assurance of his love. Sarah S. Hoyt, Whatever attainments sho made, in grace, resulted, in part, at lea-t, from a rule of life, which (she stated in part, at lea-t, from a rule of life, which take to a friend,) she had attempted to observe—"I have S. Mrs. Catlin generally enjoyed good health and was F. W. Johnson, able to attend with energy to her numerous duties un-til within a few months of her d.ccase. She began Wm. R. Lawrence, 12, to decline in August last but did not relinquish her domestic cares until October. From that period, she was a great and constant sufferer, her disease being a tumor in the face. The writer visited her frequently from the commencement of her illne s. On the com mencement of her disease she felt assured that it would terminate in severe suffering and death. She was at this time able to sit up most of the day. On her remarking that the labors of her life were done, I asked her what were her feelings in view of death? she replied, " I have been examining ancw, the foundation of my hope," then looking up with characteris-tic mildness, said: "I think Mr. — I have no reason to fear. In Richmond, March 24, after an illness of only a few days Mrs. Louisa M. Barnes, wife of Thomas Barber, and daughter of the Hon. Eli Brownson, aged 21 years. She was a young Lady possessing a most amiable disposition and eminently calculated to endear herself to all those who were favored with her society, and her death at such a period in life, is an event of the most painful and affecting nature to her husband and friends. Yet of her it may well be said, She had not lived in vain and her death was not as those who had no hope." One year ago, (about the time of her marriage,) herself and husband were the first fruit-, unto God of a most interesting revival. She lived for Christ, and in her last illness her faith was so strong, that the pair and distress made her at times insensible to other objects, yet when Christ was mentioned her mind would compose itself and she could readily say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."
